A Shadow Is Cast On Security

Red-faced Capitol police officials promised "improvements" today in the security system which permitted a black-costumed intruder to invade the House Chamber only hours before President Johnson appeared there.

The interloper, identified as Robert Lloyd, a member of the American Nazi Party, dashed into the well of the House yesterday.

Clad in black from head to foot and wearing blackface minstrel makeup, he pranced and grimaced before the stunned House members, shouting, "I'se de Mississippi delegation." He waved a large, unlit cigar and wore a jaunty, slightly crushed top hat. A fur

Capitol Policemen, caught unawares by the bizarre invasion, surged onto the floor and dragged Lloyd away. He later was charged with two counts of disorderly conduct and released after forfeiting a $20 bond.

All entrances to the House chamber were sealed off before, during and after the President's speech last night. D.C. Police Capt. Carl Schamp, who heads the Capitol Police Force, said Lloyd entered the Capitol Sunday when it was open to the public and laid out a route into the House chamber.

Witnesses said Lloyd raced up a staircase reserved for House members and sped around a corner into the Speaker's lobby. Then, running in a crouch to conceal himself, he dashed down an aisle into the well of the House.

It seemed incredible that a man so dressed could have obtained entrance into the Capitol at all, but police speculated he changed from street clothing in an employees' locker room or a rest room. (UPD)
